THE INTERNET, INDISPENSIBLE FOR PROVIDING CLASS ACTION NOTICE

The Los Angeles Daily Journal published an article on August 16 by Richard Kellner, Alfredo Torrijos and Damon Lipscomb on the value of using the Internet to inform class members of their rights in settlement and other key events.

"In 2010, it is no longer an "option" to use the Internet as a key component of delivering class notice," according to Kellner, Torrijos and Lipscomb. "At a minimum, it should be considered as a potentially vital and cost-effective component in virtually all class notice plans."
